Colorado SILC works in conjunction with a network of Centers for Independent Living (CIL) and the Colorado Division of Vocational Rehabilitation (DVR), Office of Independent Living Services. SILC members and CIL Directors create goals and objectives for the State Plan for Independent Living (SPIL) based on what is needed, according to data from Colorado's CILs and other various resources. A new plan is written by the SILC members every three (3) years, and members also must monitor the progress of the current SPIL to ensure that CILs are adhering to the outlined goals and objectives, as stated in Title VII of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, as amended.

Colorado CILs are operated by people with disabilities as non-profits to provide numerous resources that assist individuals with disabilities to live independently in the community. There are nine (9) CILs in the state that serve as a resource for people living with disabilities by providing five (5) core services: information & referral, peer support, independent living skills training, transition, and advocacy.
